

ALPHABET BOXES

Tracie Russo and Pete Daley use Alphabet Boxes as Drips (post-instruction or review). They make sure the topic is broad enough to have dozens of terms that can be used by the students. This strategy begins as a fairly shallow activity with the students simply reviewing content that they already know.

Tracie and Pete then have the students turn the paper over and take the strategy deeper with next step processing. That could include having the students rank the three most significant or interesting terms or having them make connections between terms as we do in Concept Bundles.
